

NATURAL LANGUAGE PROCESSING-BASED TEXT EMOTION DETECTION FOR SENTIMENT ANALYSIS

TEAM G

SIGNIFICANCE

- NLP-based text emotion detection improves sentiment analysis by capturing emotional nuances in text, leading to more accurate sentiment classification.
- It enhances customer feedback analysis by identifying emotions expressed in customer feedback, helping companies address concerns and improve customer satisfaction.
- NLP-based emotion detection enables real-time social media monitoring, allowing businesses to gauge public sentiment, track brand perception, and respond promptly.

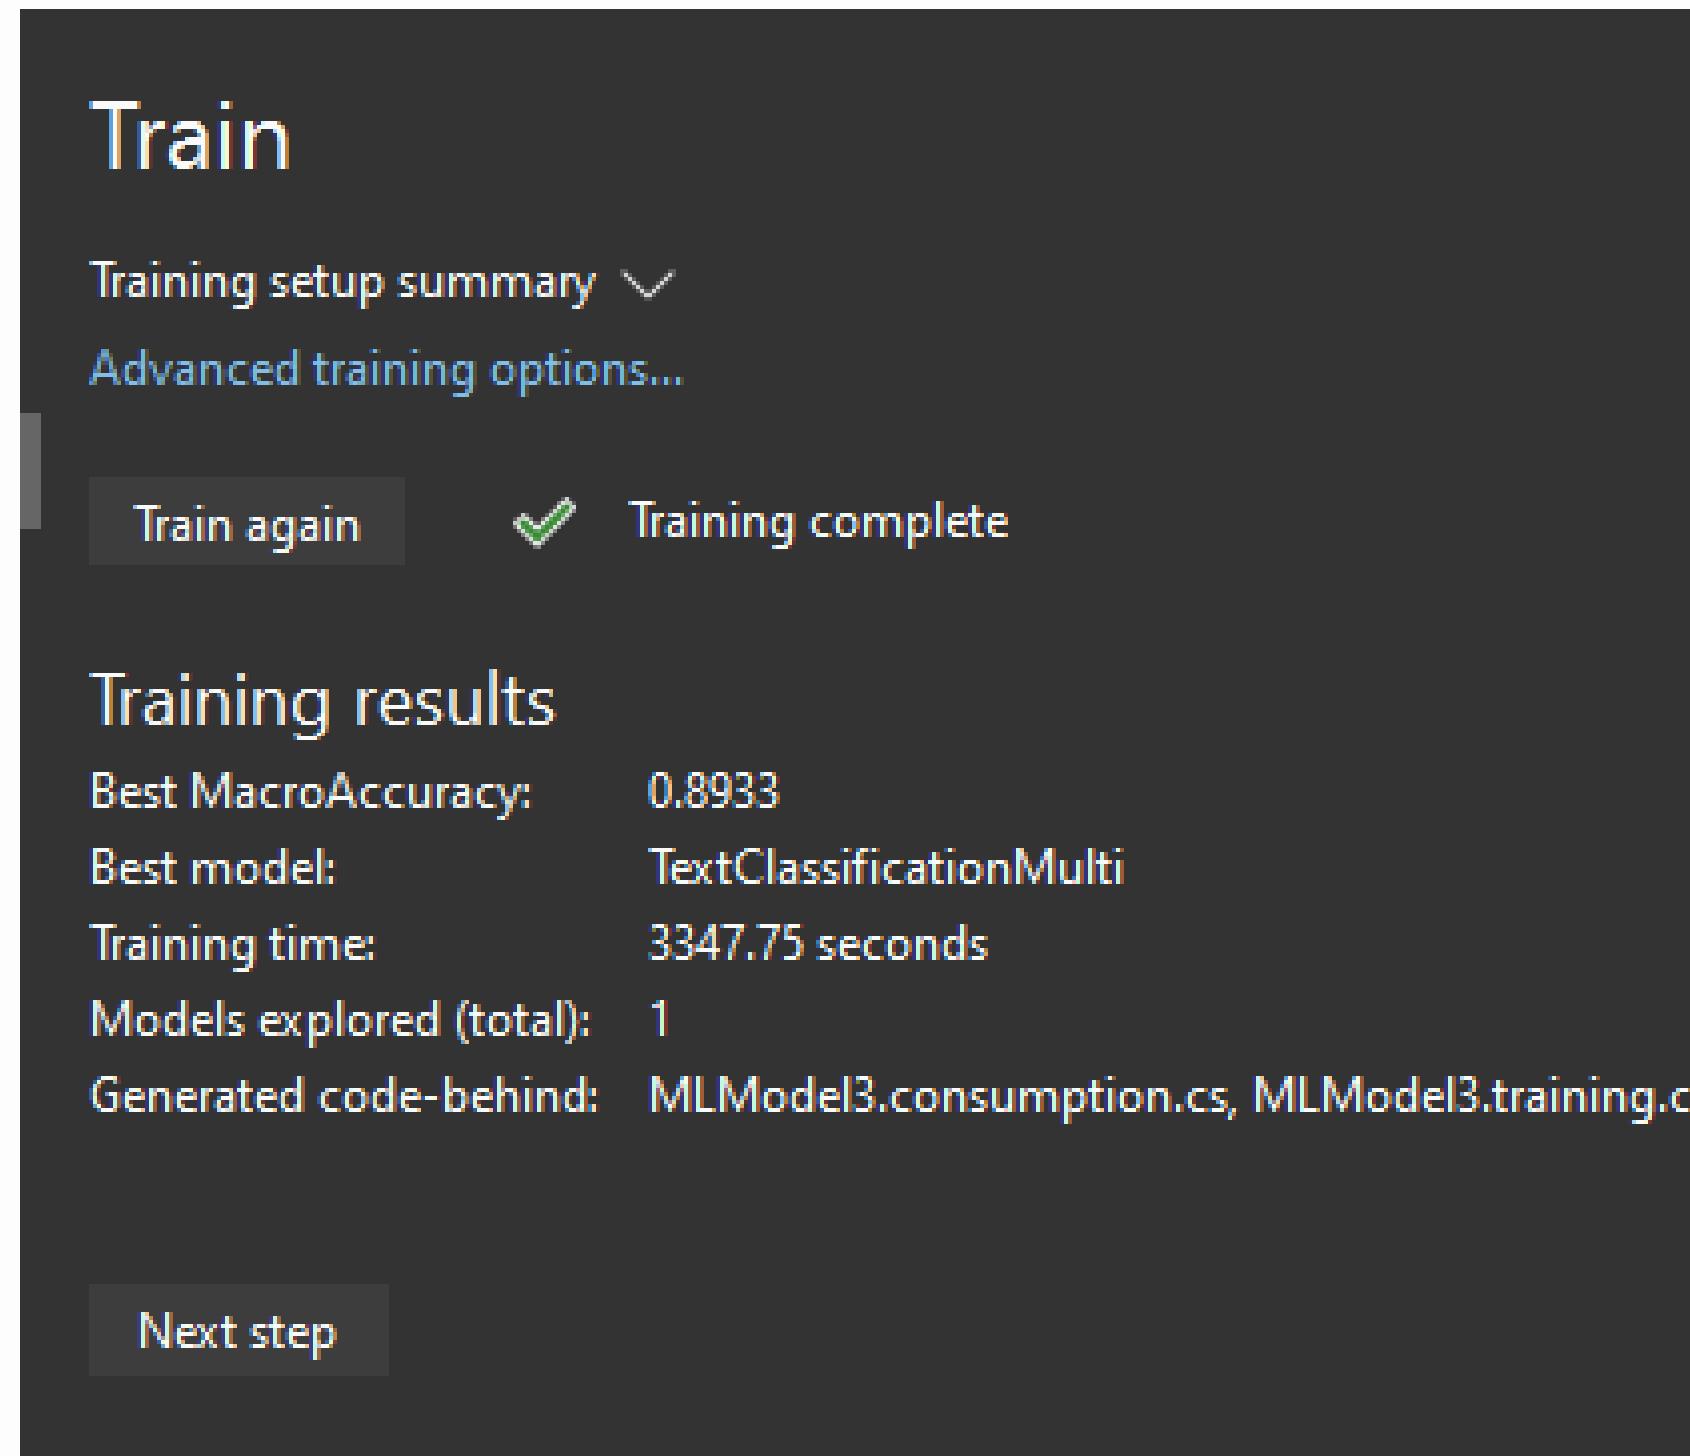

The screenshot shows a user interface for training a machine learning model. At the top, it says "Train". Below that are two buttons: "Training setup summary" and "Advanced training options...". In the center, there's a button labeled "Train again" and another labeled "Training complete" with a green checkmark. Under "Training results", the following information is displayed:

- Best MacroAccuracy: 0.8933
- Best model: TextClassificationMulti
- Training time: 3347.75 seconds
- Models explored (total): 1
- Generated code-behind: MLModel3.consumption.cs, MLModel3.training.cs

At the bottom, there's a button labeled "Next step".

WHAT IS TEXT CLASSIFICATION MULTI?

Text classification multi algorithms typically involve training a machine learning model on a large corpus of labeled text data, where each document is labeled with its corresponding class or category. The model learns to identify patterns and features in the text that are associated with each class, and can then be used to predict the class of new, unlabeled text data.

WHAT IS TEXT CLASSIFICATION MULTI?

In sentiment analysis, text classification multi can be used to automatically classify large volumes of social media posts, customer reviews, or other text data according to their sentiment. This can be a valuable tool for businesses and organizations looking to monitor customer sentiment, identify areas for improvement, and track the impact of their marketing campaigns.

TRAINING THE DATASET

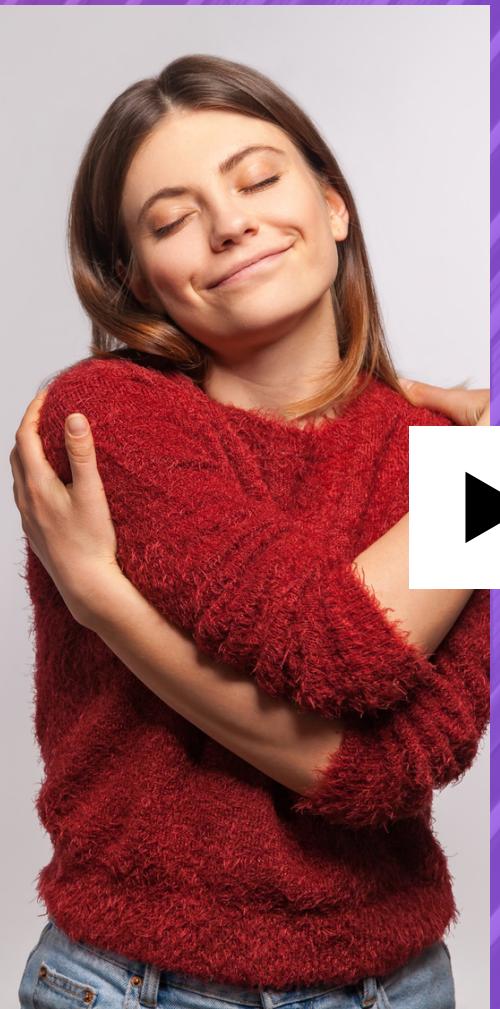

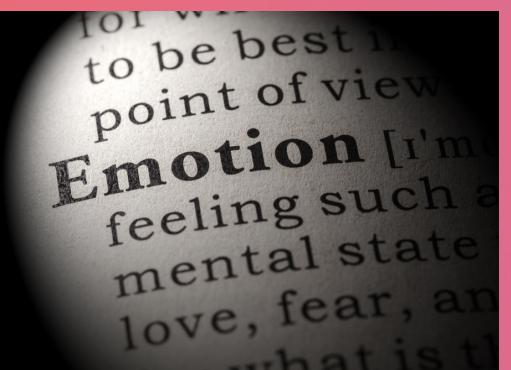

We obtained a dataset from Kaggle and split it into two subsets: a training set and a testing set. The training set contains 70% of the data, which we will use to train our machine learning model. The testing set contains the remaining 30% of the data, which we will use to evaluate the performance of our trained model. This approach of splitting the data into training and testing sets is a common practice in machine learning to prevent overfitting and to assess the generalization ability of the model.

RAW DATASET

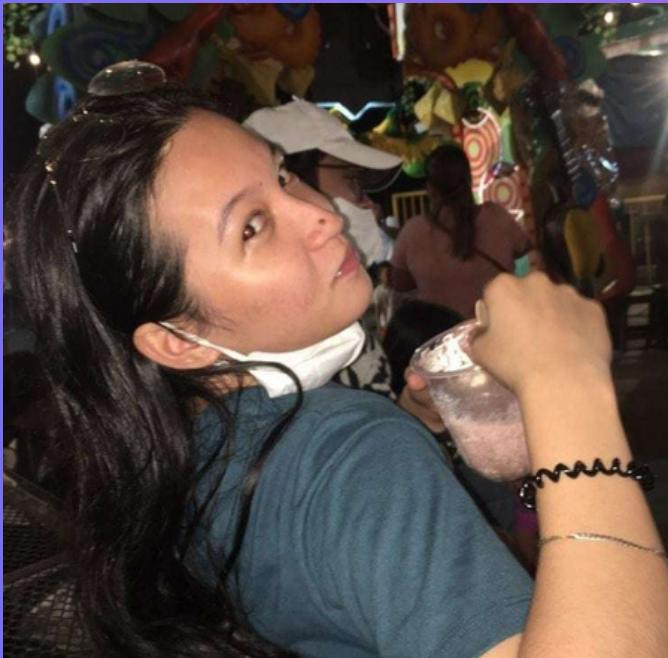

i used to go to rock festivals in high school to feel accepted and to feel like i belonged within a part of a movement that none of my classmates could relate to because they were too busy listening to their auto tuned bullshit	joy	1
